useful because it allows a server computer to provide an individual computer user with replies that are tailored to that individual computer user's interests. Further, the private demographic information is useful to the operator of the server computer in assessing the type of individuals that are accessing the server computer.

The prior art relied upon by the examiner does not address the foregoing issues in any way. The prior art merely relates to passing general demographic information over the internet. The general demographic information in no way relates to the individual computer user. Thus, the prior art cited by the examiner does not show or suggest the limitations of the present invention.

Independent claim 1 is amended to define the step of "redirecting said demographic hyperlink transfer request from said end-user computer to the remote computer specified by said remote site destination address." This step now clearly recites what the demographic hyperlink transfer request is used for. This action is not recited, shown, or taught in the prior art cited by the examiner.

In view of the foregoing amendments and remarks, it is respectfully submitted that independent claim 1 is in a condition for allowance. Claims 2-6 are dependent upon claim 1 and therefore should also be in a condition for allowance. The dependent claims define additional subject matter that is not shown or suggested in the prior art of record. For example, dependent claim 6 recites the step of "creating a demographic-tailored reply to said hyperlink transfer request based upon said demographic information". The prior art cited by the examiner in no way suggests such an operation. As indicated above, the prior art cited by the examiner relates to general demographic information, thus it cannot be used to "creat[e] a demographic-tailored reply to said hyperlink transfer request based upon said demographic information".

The remaining claims of record include limitations of the type discussed above. Thus, for the reasons set forth above, they too should be in a condition for allowance.

In view of the foregoing amendments and remarks it is respectfully submitted that the application is now in a condition for allowance. Should the Examiner believe that a telephone interview would help advance the prosecution of this case, the Examiner is requested to contact the undersigned attorney.
